Gentle Hinton Royal Good Manners.
Dr. Holub gives, in his account of Seven Years in South Africa, some interesting and instructive experiences. At one time he paid a visit to Sechele, King of the Bakwena. This royal savage entertained the traveler at tea, presented in a silver tea service, while his queen sat at the table, and two reverend gentlemen, missionaries, officiated as interpreters. Dr. Holub says:

"He was talking to these two gentlemen, who were translating to him, and he asked me about my home. I told him I was an Austrian, and he would not believe that."

"No," he said, "you must be an Englishman or Dutchman."

"I told him, when I was a boy of 13, I had read a story of him in Dr. Livingstone's book, and added that I never thought, when reading of him, that I should one day have the pleasure of meeting him. I observed that the queen did not find much to interest her in our talk, for she was quietly dozing. At the moment when I told him, her majesty came so deep down with her head that she nearly touched her cup. The king answered me at once, and raised his eyes toward the ceiling, saying, 'The ways of Providence are wonderful!' At the same moment he gave the queen to understand, beneath the table with his foot, that it was not good breeding to sleep in the presence of strangers; but he did it in such a gentle manner that she nearly fell down on the table. He did that just at the moment when he was saying to me, 'The ways of Providence are wonderful!'"

Whether her majesty thought the kick she received was one of the wonderful ways is not stated. It is more likely she knew it to be one of her royal husband's rather impressive ways.

A lady who lives in a New York hotel (says Life) is fond of animal pets and lately bought a monkey, which, though pleased with his quarters, was soon anxious to look further. He noticed that when his owner touched the electric bell, the door was presently opened. When opportunity offered he put his thumb on the electric knob and kept it there. When the door opened there were five bell-boys outside. The monkey dived through the mob of them and flew down the hall, hotly pursued. Hard-pressed, he noticed an open transom over a door marked thus: "Bath." He flew up the door and through the transom, leaving the baffled bell-boys aghast in a group inside. Instantly ensued a splash, followed by a piercing shriek; as the door flew open, a lady, scantily draped in a bath-towel, burst out on the dumfounded bell-boys and fled screaming down the hall, with the delighted monkey perched on her shoulders and holding on by her hair.
